This is how you help wildlife, tribals & forests when you buy a lantana product:-

Lantana camara is an invasive species of weed which is dominant in the forests of the Central Indian Landscape. It spreads rapidly and suppresses native plant species thus degrading the forested habitat and affecting the wildlife negatively. With the spread of lantana, forests deteriorate and wildlife has less forage and space to move; there is increased threat of forest fire with lantana. Satpuda Foundation introduced the art of making craft and furniture from lantana to the tribal communities living near protected areas of the Central Indian Landscape. Through this initiative, the tribal communities have livelihood assurance, linked to wildlife habitat restoration, by uprooting the notorious lantana weed and using it for making miniature craft or furniture.

Satpuda Foundation has supported tribal communities in Central India to earn by actively participating in wildlife habitat conservation
